Was at the grocery store today, their debit/credit machines were down. Had already been down for a couple of hours when I got there. The in-store ATM had been emptied in the first hour. To the stores credit, they had signs on all the doors and were making an announcement every five minutes. There were still people shopping, hoping the problem would be resolved by the time they wanted to checkout. Quite a

I've asked this before and I'll ask this again, what the hell is the government so scared of? First all the spying and law breaking to turn the country into a virtual police state and now the fema preparations. Something must have the government really spooked. Not only that but the information that they have received from industry telling them that it is not possible to fulfill the Armageddon scenario orders pretty much tells the government that the US will not survive such a scenario in its current form. In other words, the US will cease to exist should an Armageddon scenario present itself. Makes you wonder what Armageddon scenario they are expecting. Any ideas?

The religion of submission cannot survive an open and honest discussion of its convoluted and foolish scriptures, its sexually perverted terrorist prophet, or its deceitful and demented god. When Western leaders become unified and resolute in their hostility to Islam's violent and ungodly beginnings, Muslims will flee the religion because they will be horrified by its endorsement of terrorism, mass murder, slave trading, plunder, kidnapping, and rape.

If Muslims & their apologists really want to cure "Islamophobia," here is an easy way. Focus their indignation on Muslims committing violent acts in the name of Islam, not on non-Muslims reporting on those acts.

Just guessing, but if the New Madrid goes or the Canary Islands cause a Tsunami, or "the big one" hits Cali, or Yellowstone blows, or the Louisiana sink hole rips open into a gigantic methane filled salt dome that blows sky high and then sucks the Gulf of Mexico a few hundred miles inland...

Yeah, they might need a few tents for people and dumpsters for stuff.

Ison dust makes sense but only in the context of the fema preparations. However, the spying part means that they are expecting something else. Perhaps a bio attack but that doesn't make sense either because their isn't anything deadly enough that spreads easily to cause a pandemic like what they are expecting. Only a manufactured bio strain modified to be both highly deadly and easily transmittable. Maybe Iran is manufacturing something in one of their underground labs.

This is not a conspiracy, it is a fact.

We have always been in possible danger from a huge event, so why now suddenly take the steps to be prepared?

1000 tent hospitals across the country is not a small thing, I wonder if other countries are doing the same and how could we find out?

If it is a flu thing, it would spread to other countries fast.

I think I better hurry up and make up that Fire Cider.

It seems there are always forces on both sides of any event that might be planned, lets hope there efforts are stopped.

Quoting: stillhere

I think a lot of countries have open/public bid/RFP sites, though they will be in the local language, so if you know other languages, you could start searching for government request for proposal/bid sites and then search for requests like this for a similar timeframe and closing date and see what floats to the surface. I don't know jack for other languages, and struggle with the English language, so sally forth young go-getters!

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 27103356

I don't think so. These preparations are more along the lines of civil unrest after the partial collapse of government and social infrastructure.

I personally hope that we don't get hit with a bio attack. That would be the worst way to go imaginable. At least with a conventional attack we could fight back against our aggressors but if all we do is get sick then there is no fighting back.

That's part of fema region 3. What's weird is that it seems that fema is preparing for more than one thing. They seem to be preparing for a local event relating to zone 3 but they are also preparing for a widespread event affecting the entire country. Really weird.

They have a thing in government called "use or lose". In other words, if they don't spend every dime they've been given, they don't get as much next year. So they use the money on whatever seems to fit the mission of the agency. We have thousands of people employed to plan for major disasters; that's all they do. They sit around and think of potential scenarios and what they would do about them. Then they buy all the stuff they think they might need.

Then and only then can they miscatalog it, misplace it and screw-up the relief of any actual emergency.

Nice try, shill, but I don't think so. When they spend their budget, they don't go out and do plausibility studies beforehand. They simply purchase more of the same stuff they are already buying. These requisition studies are to find out if the products are available. Fema didn't actually buy anything. They simply asked if it is plausible should an Armageddon scenario arise. When combined with all the other plausibility studies they have been doing, it shows a pattern. That pattern means they are preparing for something or something on the horizon has them spooked.

I'm looking at this at a slightly different angle.....

If there were established businesses/companies already in CONUS that could handle this kind of a response if/when SHTF...

.... wouldn't they become a TARGET for those that do not want any first-responders that have the means, the equipment, the staff & the knowledge for such a huge emergency management event?

Do you see what I'm getting at?
